PROLOGUE

... To those individuals who have been involved in a network of services for the benefit of elderly residents of Montana, this publication serves as a vehicle of communication.

This document outlines the people at all levels of involvement: participants, volunteers, service providers, planners and advisors. It tells the story from many different points of view that emphasizes the needs for a commitment from the community and a system of interrelated services. Needs cannot be separated and treated independently. There must be a system which can respond to all needs. The links in such a system are the people who provide a multitude of talents: the bus driver who picks up the elderly to take them to the center, the I & R worker who tries for days to unravel a problem and locate a resource, the volunteer who checks in the senior participant for a nutrition program---they are all part of the system. They are all connected. They are all committed. And each one can make a difference in the lives of Montana's senior citizens.

This book is the people and the system that links them.

You--the volunteer, agency staff, elected officials and older persons
---are AGING...

Holly Luck, Chief
Aging Services Bureau
